Arno's 'One Little Kiss' Blamed by Vanderbilt in Suit

SAW ARTIST AND WIFE, HE SAYS

She Hotly Denies It and Will Fight Reno Action for Divorce

Reno, Nev., June 20 (US)—"Just one little kiss."

Mrs. Mary Weir Davidson Logan Vanderbilt insists with a flash of her blue eyes that it isn't true—that she had only known Peter Arno 10 days—and that his conduct toward her was eminently proper.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., insists that it is true, that the handsome New York artist and aristocrat did kiss pretty Mrs. Vanderbilt, in her own home, a week ago Thursday night, at a house warming, and that he saw him do it.

The son of the great Vanderbilt name rushed to court with a divorce suit, charging, extremely, but giving no particulars. The Nevada law gives him that privilege.

TO CONTEST SUIT

Mrs. Vanderbilt, completely swept off her feet by the suddenness of the move, announced through her attorney, William Woodburn, that she would vigorously contest the suit, and that for all sides had decided only 24 hours previous upon a separation agreement. Papers were about to be drawn.

"And then comes this suit for divorce. I had no idea Mr. Vanderbilt would take such a step," his wife said.

Nor that all. In the midst of suit and possible counter-suit came a rumor that Vanderbilt might bring still another action, an allegation of adultery suit against Arno.

Arno was said by his attorney, Clyde Souder, a former New Jersey district judge, to be "seriously contemplating a slander suit against Vanderbilt and Platt."

STILL UNDER GUARD
Mrs. Vanderbilt, still in the seclusion of the guarded "True Van" home, promises to have something to say on her own case.

"They charge cruelty," said her attorney, Woodburn, hotly. "If there is any cruelty in this thing it is on Vanderbilt's part, not his wife's. If there is any divorce in this case, it is going to be granted to Mrs. Vanderbilt."

Asked if his client proposed to bring a counter suit, Woodburn said that may not be necessary. She has the utmost confidence that in the ultimate determination of this matter she will prevail.

Arno has made emphatic denial that his relations with Mrs. Vanderbilt were anything "very proper." He said he had never taken her "out," and only once brought her home from a party in his automobile. And that time, he said, Vanderbilt also had been at the party.

Bolivia-Paraguay Near Open Break
Santiago, Chile, June 20 (AP)—A state of war between Bolivia and Paraguay in the Gran Chaco region over their smouldering boundary dispute was pictured today in reports reaching Chile.

A dispatch to Los Angeles from Arica said it had been authoritatively learned that the Bolivian government had ordered two regiments into that vast jungle and called "Green Hell" from La Paz and Cochabamba.

Broker Drowns as He Cries for Help
New York, June 20 (AP)—Reginald B. Brown, New York broker connected with the case of Commodore Kerr & Pratt, was drowned off a boat at Ocean Beach, Fire Island, yesterday.

A strong current carried him out to sea, while his cries for help were mistaken for shouts uttered in jest by his swim. The body had not been recovered today.

ON CINDER PATH
In representing the Cae Club at Rogers Hall, Starr Faithfull did much to keep the athletic teams out in front. Starr's "Memory Book" indicates that he loved for sleep cost her many demerits at school. She once drew three for remaining on her couch when she should have been in a study room.

"MEMORY BOOK" TELLS
In the beautiful Starr Faithfull's "Memory Book," the trip she took with a wealthy lady, New York, parties were frequent and Starr was always invited. She also attended pre-racing parties aboard the liners in the Hudson river. Starr was found aboard after one boat left pier and was put ashore.

"THRILL LIFE" GIRL AT PLAY
Starr Faithfull loved party life. In the group she met while posing in Greenwich Village, New York, parties were frequent and Starr was always invited. She also attended pre-racing parties aboard the liners in the Hudson river. Starr was found aboard after one boat left pier and was put ashore.

CLAIMED BY SEA WATERS
Then came death. It was the end of a gay life. Starr had traveled into foreign lands. She was extolled by rich men, artists, and men of many other walks of life. They knew her as one who was not happy unless there was activity. At a quiet moment Starr was in a melancholy mood.

SLAIN STARR A STUDY IN MOODS

GOV. ROOSEVELT ASKED TO INTERVENE

Committee From Bay State Demands Her Release From Sanitarium

Albany, N. Y., June 20 (AP)—Several Massachusetts residents have appealed to Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt for aid in obtaining the release of Mrs. Mabel Hunt Slater, widow of Nelson Slater, millionaire cotton manufacturer, from the Slocum's Sanitarium at Beacon, N. Y.

Mrs. Slater's complaint as an incompetent was obtained by her three children, H. Nelson Slater, Mrs. Ross Slater Murphy and Mrs. Joseph J. Kerrigan, all of New York, a year and a half ago.

Paul Hunt, Mrs. Slater's brother, contended that her confinement was illegal and taken by her son and daughter to prevent their mother from making a new will, disinheriting them.

Among the signers of a petition presented to Governor Roosevelt in support of the Slater case were Currier of Boston, Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, and Dr. S. Parker Cadman, New York, druggist.

Mrs. Slater is 66 and at the time of her commitment, March 7, 1930, was sane.

PASTOR MANGED SELF AS HOAX

Dallas, Tex., June 20 (AP)—A purported attack on B. P. Brown, hotel baggage man and occasional preacher, who was found hanging from a tree in the North Dallas Baptist Church early Thursday, has been revealed as a hoax.

Brown confessed to police he had hanged himself up, that his story four masked men stripped and hanged him, was a hoax. He was the author of threatening letters to the Rev. H. L. Marler, the regular pastor.

Brown said he had wished to end his life near the pulpit from which he occasionally preached and that he had no intention of attempting to win the pulpit from Mr. Marler.

"I wanted to die in the church," Brown said, "but I didn't have the nerve. I don't know myself just why I did all the things I did."

When Brown concluded his confession the pastor and several dozen men marched up to him and, with handcuffs, assured him of their forgiveness.

Providence, R. I., June 20 (US)—The Boston team, which won the championship of the National League, was praised by the "Wilson Players" for their performance.

BOY IS HELD IN ELY RECEIVES RAID ON STILL

Joseph Perlovsky, 17-year-old high school boy, living in Second St., Chelsea, was held in 1930 for the grand jury in federal court to go on a complaint charging him with luring an illicit still in the home near his home on June 9.

Dry agents testified they noticed a strong odor of alcohol and mash and on entering the house, went to the second floor and confronted Perlovsky telling the still. According to the officers, the boy said he was employed there making moonshine liquor for a man who paid him $10 a week.

Edward J. Stokes, counsel for Perlovsky, brought out that the agents had entered the place without a warrant.

JUDGE SCORES 'LUNG' FAILS IN LIFE FIGHT

Judge James M. Morion, Jr., in federal court has handed down a decision decreeing federal or state officers have no right to enter private buildings without legal justification.

According to the memorandum filed in the office of the clerk of federal court, federal and state officers were refused permission by Joseph B. Dean in Adams to enter his home and search a garage near his home on the ground that he had leased it to one Denby.

The officers thereupon broke the lock and entered the garage, in which they claimed were found distilling apparatus and two automobiles belonging to Dean. Dean was ordered to appear before the United States commissioner and later indicted on the evidence obtained in the search without a warrant of premises.

The search was clearly illegal, said Judge Morion, in allowing the raid. "Officers have no right to enter private buildings without legal justification."

Get a good shot of your estate, say it early, say for it, keep it, and later it will be a relief to see the estate settled in a quiet way.

GRIM DEATH THE WINNER

A petition was received today by Governor Joseph B. Ely asking that he grant a pardon to James Gallo, now in State Prison awaiting death in the electric chair. Gallo had been found guilty of the shooting in the death of Joseph Fantasia in the North End in June, 1927, in what has proved to be the most unusual murder case in Massachusetts' jurisprudence.

First Gangi Cero of Brooklyn, N. Y., was found guilty and sentenced to die. At a second trial Cero was acquitted, but Gallo, tried jointly with Cero, was convicted. Cero has since gone home to Italy.

The petition was signed by Attorney Vincent Garro and Thomas H. Mahoney.

Death won over science in a 63-hour fight at the Kings County Hospital, New York, and claimed Louise Huhne, four, as a victim. The child, suffering from paralysis, was placed, in a respirator when near death and artificial breathing started. For a time the child seemed to be on the road to health, but suffered a relapse and died. A hospital physician is shown treating the child. (International Newsphoto photo.)

Bruised in 30-Foot Fall

Although he fell 30 feet from the second-story window of his home (only 2-year-old) Ragged Redoubt (125 S. Main St., North End), was seriously injured. He was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital for treatment.

2 INJURED IN DO-X REACHES FINAL GOAL

Two men were slightly injured and a third escaped injury when the Boston Elevated bus which they were riding, advertised a trip on Highland ave., Malden.

The men, all elevated employees, were testing the bus after it had been driven to the end of the line, as they were driving along Highland ave., sometime before the eyes of Steven J. McNeil, the driver. He was clearing his eyes when the bus swung against the tree.

Lester Ryan, of Highland ave., Malden, and Frank Fowler, of Home st., Malden, were treated for the car house for slight cuts about the face.

SHIPS CRASH IN FOG; 1 SINKING

Tokyo, June 20 (AP)—The Exchange Telegraph Agency said today that the American freighter Billingham and the Japanese freighter Koyu Maru had collided in fog 15 miles south of Oboshi Point and that the Japanese vessel was sinking.

The American freighter, owned by the Tacoma Oriental Steamship Co., was reported to be only slightly damaged and able to continue her voyage to Yokohama. The Japanese vessel was outward bound from Yokohama.

Motorman Injured When Struck by Auto

Haverhill, June 20—Benjamin Dresser of Elm st., Georgetown, veteran motorman for the Eastern Massachusetts Railway Co., who was struck by an auto while, according to police report, was operated by Anna Gendron of Bradford st., Lawrence, is suffering from slight concussion of the brain. Dr. Francis W. Anthony said.

Dresser, who was taken to Glen Hospital, alleged from a bus in front of the way car bars just before being hit by the machine.

500 HUNT FOR 'LOST' MAN, 86

Recently, June 20—More than 500 Boy Scouts, police and firemen are combing the woods here today in search of William Torrey, 86-year-old retired seaman who disappeared from his home during the night.

The aged seaman, who has lived with John J. Weatherly on Cabot st. for 15 years, left police believe this morning to institute a wide hunt to escape the intense heat of the house.

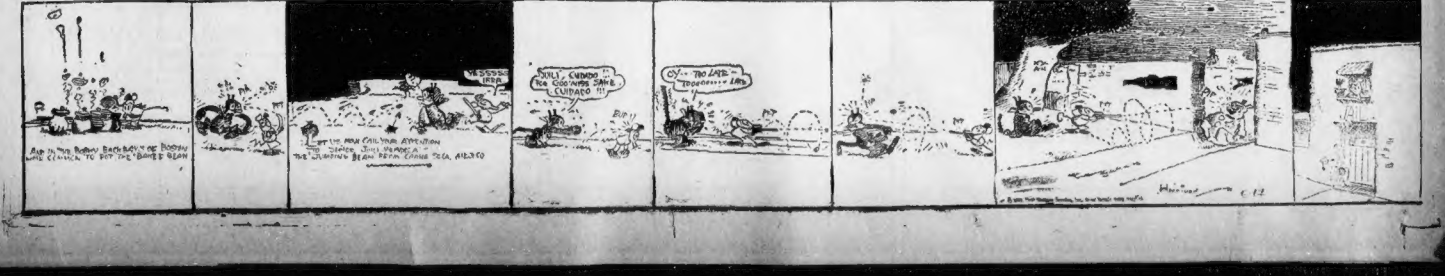

Fear that he may have wandered into nearby underbrush and either become lost or injured led authorities this morning to institute a wide hunt.

Torrey was in the fishing camp on the coast for the major part of his life. He has one son, Samuel L. Torrey, and a daughter, both of this city.

Alackaday! Way of the Lady Transgressor's Hard in the Films

By HARRIE SCHULTZ

Factors accounted for by director, actor and plenty of shrewdly lingerie, give "Transgression," feature now on the RKO Keith screen, audience appeal, particularly for the lovers of the highly sophisticated variety of screen entertainment. It's melodrama, and the motivations lack newness. But almost everything body knows the smacking richness of quality of old wine; and it's to the credit of Herbert Brenson, who sponsored the direction, that he has turned out a product so well knitted together, so smoothly told by his camera, that it has theater value. Add to his effort the fact that Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez and Paul Cavanagh give life to the corners of the "love triangle," and you get the secret of "Transgression's" pull. It suffers from overmuch talk, yet comes under the wire despite its shortcomings.

The story, based on Kate Jordan's novel, "The Next Corner," starts out by telling how Kay Francis, as Elsie, marries for money. Her eye happens to fall upon Cavanagh, seen as Maury the mining engineer. Hardly are they out of their honeymoon happiness as business calls afar, and when duty calls, the business here must be broken. Far-flung India, somewhere west of Mandalay and many miles from English home soil, beckons the mine expert, and thither he goes, first packing his wife off to Paris to await his return. Now it so happens that she is most attractive—let's say Kay Francis is the synonym of feminine lure—and hence she must become butterfly lady, or a flame about which the cosmopolitan moths of love are to flutter. The old song may be wrong, for absence didn't make the dancer's heart grow fonder for her hubby; instead, she falls within the magnetic wiles of one, Ricardo Cortez, famous wherever the cinema prospers, for his gay and winning way with the fair sex.

The Villain Pursues With a Vengeance

As a Spanish Don, wealthy and all that, he makes an artful play for the wife who has been gradually laying aside her grass widow's weeds—English tweeds, we should say—for the silk and satin and what-nots of the jassy circle about her. Ricardo Cortez, and the inevitable happens, he conquers. Just about this juncture, Cavanagh shows up, and the alluring Kay has to play the danger to avoid crossing the Channel with him. She asks a delay, and her excuses pass muster, for he is a most forgiving sort of fellow. Out of sight out of mind, and hardly is Paul departed, but his spouse is off to Don Ricardo's castle in the sierra. But the wife, honest at heart, must write a letter to Maury, explaining all.

Now, what a tangled web it is the Lithlorio weave weaves that they practice to deceive the gentler sex! The Don of a castle whom the Don had compromised, lays him low with a bullet. A Miss Staines flees to the sheltering arms of Paul, hoping to pass the letter on the way. She succeeds, and is firmly entrenched in strategic position on the home sector when the situation does turn up. Luckily, it contains only a blank sheet of paper, and that ends well, the wife discovers she has been found of husband, after all. And he forgives—and goes to forget.

Miss Francis, in her wonted fascinating manner, makes the transgressing lady a notable characterization. Here is a finished performance, graced with all the fine points of real artistry; her admirers should never miss her in this. Cavanagh does well enough; and Cortez is a most engaging and believable lovefiend. Women will probably throng to this film, and the men will certainly adore the beautiful Miss Francis in all her many revelations of form and fashion.

"Daddy Long Legs" Fathers the Children

Director Alfred Santell deserves extra marks of merit for his handling of "Daddy Long Legs," the Janet Gaynor-Warner Baxter film holding the chief place on the Metropolitan screen this week. One may ignore certain flaws in the structure because of better things that Santell has achieved: How well does he build up his "atmosphere." You are intrigued, led on by the nose, from the first flash. It does so take ability to construct entertainment out of freshness of plot; so Mr. Santell should have much of the praise for this "mammoth" of a picture for box-office purposes. He gets, for one thing, a screen depth and a panoramic play which carry the observer over about all the weak points in the narrative; he uses his cameras mightily effectively, all things considered.

Conceding all due meeds to the adult actors, the reviewer must perform, acclaim the excellence of the child players in this movie. They give it a charm of a rare kind, and several of them are so clever that they stand out conspicuously, ranking even with the grown-ups about them. It's good theater, this picture.

PURSUIT AND RETREAT

This may be some kind of a game—possibly hide and seek. At any rate, the ardent Ben Lyon finds Elsie Swanson as elusive young person. It's in "Indiscretion," at Low's State.

FAIR STANDARD BEARERS OF THE CURRENT FILM PARADE

Kay Francis looks upon stirring events with calm indifference in the rather exciting film, "Transgression," now showing at RKO Keith's. It's a drama of bewildering mixture.

Janet Gaynor, fascinating and talented, finds herself very much at home in the romantic comedy, "Daddy Long Legs," current at the Metropolitan. She's a regular little lady.

EXHILARATION

Joan Crawford is the sprightly heroine in "Laughing Sinners" now at Low's Orpheum.

Orpheum Star Is Fair Joan

America's dancing daughter reaches for a tambourine instead of a cocktail in "Laughing Sinners," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture version of the stirring Kenyon Nicholson play, "The Tenth Hour." The star is Joan Crawford.

A scintillating vaudeville program is offered on the stage. The well-known comedian, Bert Walton, is the headliner. He offers a rollicking monologue, accented with farcical fun, riotous humor and comedy idioms. His clever versatility is well appreciated and applauded. Corinne Tilton, who is among the peers of character comedienne, furnishes another high spot on the bill with her program of satirical impressions. Her sketches are finely drawn and deftly colored.

A domestic comedy sketch, "Any Family," which humorously and entertainingly depicts the problems of any home, is very lively. A unique and colorful revue, presented in pleasing manner, is contributed by the J. J. Meyer and Doris Walker and the Mayfair Sextette. The Bardings round out the bill with brilliant social feats.

Films and Vaudeville at the Bowdoin Square

Beginning tomorrow the Bowdoin Square offers a good picture and vaudeville bill. On screen will be Robert Montgomery in "Shipmates." Another picture feature is "Bachelor Apartment," a delightful film story. The cast has Lowell Sherman, Irene Dunn, Edna Murray and Norman Kerry. Seven selected vaudeville acts will supply meriment. Wednesday is Cabaret night with extra vaudeville.

"6 Cylinder Love" at Modern and Beacon

Spencer Tracy is the star at the Public Beacon and Modern Theaters in "6 Cylinder Love." Edward Everett Horton, Harry Fox, William Collier, Jr., Una Dresser, El Brendel and Ruth Warren.

The Star's Indiscretion Is the Better Part of Film Valor

By HARRIS MORGAN

Gloria Swanson, with the help of a competent cast, makes "Indiscretion," feature at Low's State, one of the great laugh hits of the season. There is no withstanding its exuberant fun; its humor is infectious, with the result that a hilarious movie begets rare hilarity in the audience. It is sure-fire for the meriment, and in addition here and there passages of drama, which lose class by contrast with the overwhelming gaiety of the film.

The picture puts in its farcical punches early, and soon is rollicking along on its mirthful way. Miss Swanson, as is to be expected, does a great job, and her fans will be well satisfied with her performance. Also, she shows a fetching green, and sings two songs with ability.

Through sequences of pathos and of love value than the comedy intervals. Miss Swanson meets every demand in the story of a girl with a past who talks about it to the man she is going to marry. The old problem, fortunately, is dealt with from new angles, and with plenty of laughable situations. Miss Swanson, as Jerry Trent, is on the threshold of the star when she is dismissed to find her sister, who had been studying abroad, taking up with Jerry's former tutor and becoming engaged to him. Jerry's prospective husband, a young novelist, portrayed by Ben Lyon, knows of her past romance but does not know the identity of the man. Surprises Jerry and her ex-lover heart together at a party, in an amorous attitude.

It is in this interesting situation that the star finds herself, and the steps she takes not only to save her sister from a man unworthy of her, but her attempt to patch up her own romance with the young novelist carry her through the whole emotional gamut.

Ben Lyon helps no little in making a success of the picture. Barbara Kent and Arthur Lake handle their roles well. Monroe Oweley, as the "heavy" shiner far more brightly, as does Nella Walker and the exceedingly capable Maude Eburne.

Harty to Lead at the Pops

Mr. Hamilton Harty will be the guest conductor in Symphony Hall tomorrow night as the Pop concert opens the last two weeks of their 46th season, this being the last Sunday concert. Mr. Hamilton Harty is to make his first bow to the American public as conductor, although he has long been known here by the high repute of his Hallé Concerts in Manchester, England, which he has led since 1920.

The distinguished musician was formerly conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. Some years ago, he visited this country as a pianist.

Arthur Fiedler will present a Russian program on Monday evening, and introduces to Boston on Wednesday, "Fascade" by William Walton, the English composer, which is based on poems by Edith Sitwell. The English concert will be sojourn on the same evening, playing a Concert Piece in Piano and Orchestra by Weber.

Double Feature Bill at the Gayety Theater

Two feature photoplays, together with a comedy and short subjects, are shown continuously from 9 a. m. on weekdays, with an entire change of program thrice weekly, at the Gayety. Tomorrow Babe Daniels is featured in "My Fair" and Rex Lease in "Tab Kid." Beginning Monday, Lew Ayres is seen in "The Iron Mask" and Vera Reynolds in "The Lawless Woman."

"The Village of Sin" at Fine Arts Today

The Fine Arts has this week the first Russian film directed by a woman. She is Olga Preobrazhenskaya.

'West of Broadway' Is to Be the Next Picture for Jack Gilbert

By HARRIET PARSONS

Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, June 20.—Great excitement out at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer over a sudden change in plans for Jack Gilbert. "Candle Light," a stage play, was definitely set for Gilbert's next vehicle, but Gene Markey has just completed an adaptation of "West of Broadway" which made such a hit with studio executives that they have decided to substitute it for "Candle Light." Harry Beaumont will direct, Paul Bern will supervise "West of Broadway" and the dialogue comes from the clever pen of Gene Markey.

Lois Wilson, who since her fine performance in "Seed" has become one of the bright particular lights of the universal lot, will play a part in Billie Dove's picture, "The Age for Love." Howard Hughes has just closed a deal which sends Lois for a visit to the Caddo lot. Hughes never pinches pennies as the costly "Hell's Angels" proved, but he is more than apportioning himself on the Billie Dove picture.

Blonde Greta Granstedt draws a brief but striking character role in United Artists' production of "Hard Scene." She will play Mary Jones, the hard-boiled youngster who comes home with the milkmaid. Now, that is misleading—what I mean is that Mary turns up on the doorstep along with the milk bottles. Greta has never had an outstanding break in pictures and this looks like her chance. "Hard Scene" will have seven members of the original New York cast headed by the funny but terrifying Beulah Bondi as the villainous Mrs. Jones.

Seems to me there are more cases lately of productions being halted, stories re-written and players recast than ever before. That old Devil depression is probably back of it all, but I prefer to blame it on the mid-century madness that overtake folks, even superlatives, in this sun-drenched and wild west calling. I wouldn't be surprised to see all story conferences deferred to the 19th hole at Del Monte or the deck of a yacht in California harbor.

All who have led up to Howard Hughes' difficulties with his air comedy, "Sky Devils." The cast has been dismantled while the story is being re-written by Dashiell Hammett, Lewis Meltzer, and Tom Buckingham. Hammett's author of "Maltese Falcon," Buckingham was partly responsible for "Her Man," among other worthy achievements, and Meltzer needs no introduction.

Lois Lane, Sidney Toler and Spencer Tracy are in the cast will probably not be in the re-written version which is now being considered. Tom Buckingham will direct.

Everybody in Hollywood seems to make up the studios' minds for them. Just because Constance Bennett is under contract to RKO-Pathe it was generally assumed that Tay Garnett's adaptation of Tom Buckingham's story, "Belvedere," was intended for her.

At a matter of fact it's set for Helen Twelvetrees and since the script is perfect almost in hand already, it will probably be her next. "The Second Shift," an announced yesterday, will follow later. By the way, if this column seems to put the emphasis on certain studios these days, it's because that is where the news lies. What is the use of it in this slack season. L. O. P. wasn't as dumb when he picked this month for a vacation.

Well, I took Pat Carson, that funny-looking bulldog of L. O. P., out into society to give her a little polish. Took my own

ANXIOUS LITTLE ARMFUL

DAILY NEWS STORY

JANE AND THE BEAUTY

"OH, JANE, COULD YOU BE HAPPY WITH ME?"

"POOR JANE FOX!" People grew so accustomed to saying it that they sometimes didn't lower their voices in her presence. "She's so plain!"

Jane's mother had long ago given up her sporadic efforts to make Jane attractive, to awaken her interest in life, in the young folks about her. Jane just didn't seem to care that her hair was stringy, her skin pale, that the young men of Chelton didn't even know she existed.

It was, folks said, Jane's mother's fault for trying to push the girl from her earliest moment. Jane, wearying of being pushed, had sunk into the apathy of a balky mule. At 25, to avoid her mother's attentions, Jane took to wearing spectacles, and feigned a great love of learning.

One evening the circuit lecturer was "Dr. Dudley Draper, an eminent psychologist. Between Jane's mother and her disapproving, she had closed her eyes and saw that he continued staring at her. Then she heard his thundering words:

"It is the duty of everyone of us to be attractive, not just for our own sakes, for the sake of our families and friends. Mental alertness means physical alertness. Physical alertness means an awakened interest in the life about us, a harmony with it."

Eyes on Jane

She Remained in Seat

Jane awoke today at the end of the lecture, and at the end of the dark lecture, Dr. Draper was still fixed on her. When the women crowded around him compliment him, Jane for some reason remained in her seat.

When the women had gone, a young man came to her, though she had invited him and said simply, "I'm going to escort you to your home."

It was astonishing but true—that she had accepted his commanding invitation and went out into the dark streets of her home town. He had always known her, she had always known him. He had been outside the veil of her diffidence, made her admit all her woes, her hopes and ambitions. He sympathized with her.

"I used to be like that," he said, "didn't care what anyone thought or did. I'm changing myself over it. That's why I'm lecturing for this summer."

He made contacts with people. "Think of you, here walking home, you tonight. It isn't me—or you either. I sort of felt like I had been changed. I make a good doctor if I can't overcome my indifference. And you, you've got to be out of it. You're a case of arrested interest. Think of me as your doctor and do just what I say. Forget your mother's admonitions for you, her old-fashioned ideas of what a young lady should be. Invest in some rouge, lipstick, buy new clothes that don't date back to the beginning of the century."

"She said, 'Go on, tell me some more.'"

"I'm coming back this way in a month," he said. "I lecture near here, and I'm going to run over to Chelton to see you've progressed. You'll be interested, understand—am I interesting, psychologically?" He laughed and squinted her hand.

At first, the good residents of Chelton thought that "poor Jane" had gone stark raving mad. Then they admitted reluctantly that she had a mad-up-addict's charming lines to her hollow face.

A Big Change

Jane's Clothes Ravied

Whatever she had done to her hair brought out golden lines, and her clothes were remarkable. She was the envy of Chelton's usually younger set.

Don Bates, who never looked at Jane in the old days, was taking her to the dance, and Mrs. Fox estimated delight that she would be the daughter of her late daughter at the end of the summer.

By the time the billboards in town announced that Dr. Dudley Draper, psychologist, was lecturing in the nearby town of Hall's Point, Jane's mother was "that remarkable egg girl."

Don Bates understood why she wanted to pass up a good dance at the country club that night. Mrs. Fox couldn't understand why her daughter insisted on going off 10 miles to a neighboring town to hear a doctor—and all by herself.

Dr. Draper saw her immediately in the third row. His lecture seemed to be directed entirely at her.

He told her "applied psychology" and told of actual cases of shy people who had changed the entire scope of their lives by an effort to attune themselves to their surroundings. He told the story of himself, but only Jane knew that was his own tale. He told her story, carefully veiled, and when he came to the end of it, he said:

"I wish you could see that girl now. She is radiantly beautiful and radiantly happy."

He looked at Jane for a moment. "She is very popular with the young people of her home town, and I believe is engaged to be married to one of her fellow townsmen."

He drove back to Chelton with her, and this time his words were not too empty. She was awed by the change in her and humble in her presence.

A Better Cure
Doctor to Stay in Town

"I cured you better than I did myself," he said finally. "But that's what a doctor does. He heals. This is my last lecture. I'm going to set up my ambulance here in Halling, because I need a place to live. He has put me into getting educated and dealing in the—now I've got to come down to brass tacks, dealing with people."

"I can't believe you're shy, after all that," he said. "You've been lecturing—and after the way you've kidnapped me from the Chelton lecture."

"I can't understand it myself now," he said. "I must have recognized a fellow traveler. And now—I'm going to be married, of course."

He happily ever after—she mocked. "Yes, I am, doctor. I followed your instruction to the letter. I don't want to go back from the glory of your cure. Your psychology was most correct in every detail. And now I might not be a good exhibit A for your future lectures."

He looked at her, made her drive to the side of the road and stop the car.

"Do you love him," he demanded. "Can he make you happy?"

"That wasn't included in the prescription," she laughed. "The lecture is the lecture. 'Well, this is,' he said. 'He held her hand. He said, 'I'm going to marry him just to get to you. Oh, Jane, could you be happy with a struggling country doctor?' Don Bates never knew, but he hardly knew me. But after you've been lecturing, he said, 'I've gotten a little staid, could you put up with the hardships of a married life?'"

"I think I could if you're the doctor."

Watertown Police
Seek Missing Girl

The Watertown Police have been asked to search for a 14-year-old girl who disappeared from her home last Wednesday.

SIX COLLAPSE IN CRASH AT CURLEY WEDDING

Two Medford Auto Thieves Flee Bullets After Crash

'NEATH CONFETTI SHOWER DRIVER OF AUTO HIT IN CHASE IS INJURED

Metropolitan Officer Fires at Thieves, Who Escape in Fellyway Woods

Two men in a stolen automobile led a policeman a wild chase through Medford early today, escaping on foot after shots were fired and the car had crashed into another machine.

William E. Rock of West St., Medford, driver of the other car, was buried to the street and his machine overturned. He escaped with a few scratches and bruises.

The chase started when a speeding sedan on the Fellyway, West Medford, failed to stop at command of Officer Walter W. Dacey of the Metropolitan District police.

Dacey, in a police car, followed and recognized the registration number of the racing machine as that of a car reported stolen.

He fired several shots, but the fugitive driver merely increased his speed. At the Malden-Medford line the stolen car shot into Medford and struck Rock's machine, side-swiping it. Two men then leaped from the stolen car and escaped.

Muzzling Dogs to Be Opposed

A bitter battle over the question of muzzling all dogs because of the prevalence of rabies is expected at the City Council today.

The George A. Bigelow, state commissioner of health, animal inspection and order, is discussing the question.

Dr. Bigelow sent out 1700 invitations and hopes both sides of the question will be well represented.

"He understood considerable opposition will be manifested to muzzling dogs during the day," he said. Speakers will include Dr. Milton J. Koonard, Dr. Langford, Dr. Ham of Harvard Medical School, Dr. W. H. H. of the state department of public health, and Dr. Bigelow.

Throng Attend Wedding of Miss Curley to S. R. White; 1000 at Reception

Six women fainted today in a crush of several thousand persons who crowded into St. Patrick's Church, Roxbury, at the wedding of Miss Sally Paula Curley, niece of Mayor Curley, to Stanton Reid White, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. White of Boston.

The crowd, containing practically every city official and many other notables with their families, overflowed to the church steps and the sidewalk, while a detail of police kept traffic moving.

MAYOR IS PRESENT

The six women, caught in the body of the church, were overcome by the heat, and were carried out and revived. The services were not interrupted.

Headed by the mayor and President Joseph McGrath of the city council, the entire city government attended the ceremony, together with Police Commissioner Hultman, Traffic Commissioner Connel, Sup. of Police Crowley and many others.

Nuptial mass was celebrated by the Rev. William Cane. Miss Margaret T. Curley, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Mrs. Helen D. Savage was matron of honor.

BRIDE'S ATTENDANTS

Other attendants were Miss Rita, Mary and Ellen Curley, also sisters of the bride; Eleanor M. Murphy, Brighton; Kathleen J. Mahoney, West Roxbury; Mary D. Curley, daughter of Mayor Curley; Mary G. Murphy, Roxbury; Frances S. Curley, Arlington; Margaret J. Curley, Arlington; Audrey White, sister of the bridegroom.

Frank J. Long and Eugene Doherty, best men. The ushers included J. Burke Sullivan, Richard H. Nolan, William Doyle, James A. Hogan, W. Arthur Reilly, Leo Leary, James J. Flinn, Lieut. Bartley Hogan, U. S. N., Washington; Frank J. Long and Eugene Doherty; William J. Sullivan, O'Connell, Dorchester, and John A. Sullivan, Dorchester.

RECEPTION

After the ceremony the parents of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Curley, gave a reception at the Copley Place, which was attended by 1000 guests.

Motorcycle officers escorted the bridal couple from the church to the hotel, and fire apparatus along the line assisted them with arms.

The bride lived with her parents in Winthrop st., Roxbury, a graduate of St. Joseph's Academy and the Mt. Ida School of Newton. She has been president of the New England Club and the Young Club of the Mt. Ida School.

Mr. White is a graduate of the Villanova Preparatory School where he played on the football team. He is a student at the Suffolk Law School and a member of the Sandy River Country Club.

COOK-COOS

By TED COOK

This is the time of year when a father discovers that a college education has taught his son—

- 1—Concentration. (Sleeps until noon.)
- 2—Determination. (Never stops hunting for cigarettes and stamps.)
- 3—Generosity. (Buys gasoline on credit at every station in town.)
- 4—Individuality. (Squeezes the toothpaste tube from top.)

This is Simeon Dookes who was last night expelled from the Apex Moving Picture Theatre because of a riotous conduct. According to the three ushers responsible for the action, Dookes was making the rest of the patrons feel uncomfortable during the showing of a news reel by laughing at the funny sayings of the talking reporters.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME. GAYLORD—Why do you stay away from home, am worried. I will not harm you, Ida Schmoor.

"The trouble with most original ideas," says Genevieve, the kitchen rhymer, "is that nobody thought of them before for very good reasons."

Q. and A. DEPARTMENT

Dear Sympathetic Aunt Bella—Would it be all right, that is, what would you think of a boy taking a girl to a distant city to see the sights and everything but in a perfectly proper way, of course?

Ans.—I would be very interested, dearie. Keep me posted.

—(Olfactory) Bella.

THE WEDDING OF THE PAINTED MOLL

THE WEDDING OF THE PAINTED MOLL

Oh, such wedding gifts and all! For the gangster and his moll—Warren from Ivey Johnson, Colt and Remington. Scores of blackjacks (heavyweight) with airplanes by the crate. And the very latest type of Gaiety gun.

Oh, a huge chest for the bride packed with tear-bombs, side by side. With cartridges, dum-dums and T. N. T.

But the gift the groom liked best was an armor-plated vest—A steel mesh suit like "R. I. P."

No one gave the bride away. But the cat in her bouquet. Gave the minister the fifties as he spoke.

With his hands raised in salute. All the guests then followed suit. (Force of habit is a very hard to break.)

Oh, to grace the wedding march. Saved-off shotgun fired an arch—

When to the curb an armored motor drew;

And the bridegroom and the bride Then were taken for a ride.

While the band played a rat-tat-tat-tat-tat.

—NORMA WILSON.

Adam Scofield's Diurnal

This evening to the apothecary to buy a bottle of root for my aching tooth and whilst there fall in conversing with blonde cashier telling so that I did stand at her elbow for an hour, we conversing first of one thing and then another (she talking baby talk), and were I not a married cuckoo, no-doubt I would have stolen there longer, she being such a pretty creature.
